

CURRENTS

prevailing direction and the currents expressed in logs. Dashed arrows are apparent current directions which are used when ship log information is not available. They are used as the probable drift in a particular area. They do not indicate the speed which may occur. In a zone of converging currents, the water movements are of variable direction in mate along foreign coasts.

ER